Docket Number 04-7984

I suffer from a shy bladder, also known as Paruresis. Shy bladder is a real medical disorder and those suffering from it are unfairly discriminated against under present urine only testing rules. I object to the rules that equate inability to produce a specimen with refusal to test as these are unjust. SAMHSA needs to immediately mandate the use of alternative tests; oral fluid; hair; sweat patches; for anyone who requests these, but especially for those who claim to suffer from shy bladder. However, I do believe that the employer or government should not be burdened with any additional costs for these alternate tests. The paruretic should be required to pay the difference between the alternate test and a standard test.
